

The Marriage of Work and Ministry

What kind of church makes workplace evangelism and discipleship part of its missional DNA? That is the question asked by our new Alpha in the Workplace partner, “His Church at Work.”

“The workplace is the place where [believing] members spend the majority of their waking hours, face the majority of their challenges to living out their faith, and have a majority of their interactions with the unbelieving and unchurched world,” says Doug Spada, founder of His Church at Work.

“His Church at Work helps churches [to] pastor people’s work lives with the same sense of stewardship as the rest of [church] ministry.”

His Church at Work comes alongside churches to develop effective ministries of work/life evangelism and discipleship that are customized to each church’s culture and core values. Like Alpha, His Church at Work serves as a connecting point for like-minded churches. That’s why the two organizations have linked together. Through this partnership, we plan to effectively equip the local church to have a holistic workplace ministry, which can include Alpha in the Workplace as the key evangelism component.

“I have only a few times in my life experienced anything as powerful and as God filled as our church WorkLife Ministry.”

Hosanna Lutheran Church

Hosanna Lutheran in Lakeville, Minn., is one church that has caught the vision for Alpha, as well as for work/life evangelism and discipleship through their partnership with His Church at Work. The church has seen tremendous growth as a result. Hosanna Lutheran will host the next Alpha in the Workplace conference on November 2, immediately followed by an Alpha conference. His Church at Work will also participate, encouraging churches to think holistically about the workplace and ministry to those in the workplace.
